

Cons & Pros of Spiritual Ramadan Fasting

Each year, millions of Muslims practise daily fasting, and refrain from eating or drinking from sunrise (Suhour) to sunset (Iftar). With that in mind, let us explore the good as well as not-so-good facts about fasting.

Ramadan fasting is obligatory for the healthy adult. The intention of fasting for Muslims during Ramadan is to learn self-control from everyday pleasures, and to strengthen spiritual bond with the Almighty (God), to purify the body as well as soul.

Starting with the Pros of fasting, there are Psychological Benefits: when fasting, Muslims are also obligated to abstain from falsehood in speech and action, from any ignorant and indecent behaviour, fighting, As a result, fasting strengthens control of impulses and helps develop good behaviour.

And Physical Benefits: It is scientifically proven that intermittent fasting can be beneficial for health and mind. When a person stays away from constant eating and drinking fluids, this leads to weight loss and reduction of cholesterol in the blood. Moreover, the body gets a chance to detoxify the digestive system.

Let's introduce some Cons of fasting, after a period of fasting, research shows people tend to demand more foods, with higher calorie content. This can reverse the intended effects of a weight management plan. Some short-term side effects may occur such as headaches, dizziness, light-headedness, fatigue, low blood pressure and abnormal heart rhythms.
