Stories from recent natural disasters

Over the past few months, the United States, Mexico and nearby Caribbean Islands have suffered major natural disasters.

The recent fires in Northern California have killed 23 people with at least 285 people still missing, according to CNN nearly 170.000 acres have been burned through the state.

As reported by ABC News, Irma Hurricanes causes around $100 billion in damages, killed 75 people in Florida and ravaged islands in the Caribbean.

For the first time in 300 years, there is not a single living person on the Island of Barbuda. A civilisation that existed there over 300 years has now been extinguished, Ronald Sanders told "USA today" after Hurricane Irma hit.

Though there has been, an incredible damage and loss of life, there has also been "light amidst darkness". Collected here are two of these stories that have caught national attention.

Airbnb (Air, bed and breakfast) has activated its open homes for those who have lost their homes in California fires. The company is asking for hosts to donate any space for those displaced by the fires to stay while they get back on their feet.

During the Hurricane Harvey, a panic set for a woman who was soon to be a mother. According to people, Andrea Smith and her husband expected to drive to hospital to give birth, but they were met with 2 to 3 feet of water outside their apartment. Luckily, a neighbour of Smith's had contacted a friend who lived near a fire station. The friend commandeered a fire truck and drove to take them to hospital. More of Smith's neighbours formed a human chain to get her safely to the fire truck.
