A/ Comprehension

Ethics is the set of moral rules that the professionals in any field are expected to respect when they deal either with each other or with the public. In business, ethics represents the attitudes that individuals and firms should comply with in the actions they perform and the decisions they take at every level of their realizations. Such a philosophy does not exist everywhere because it needs the existence of important conditions to apply it.

In societies where both political and cultural conditions exist for making everyone obey this practice, the main principles that those engaged in the economic branches should follow a good number of the qualities that have always served as the basis for progress. Among them we find the obligation to be honest and lawful in one's activities. It is also essential to act in conformity with the spirit of fair competition which imposes the acceptance of new comers in one's sphere and forbids the recourse to the use of monopolization not only in the spheres of manufacturing and selling goods but also as regards the services which are provided to the community.

Next to these aspects, ethics requires from the various members and groups of economic sectors the payment of one's taxes to the state and the necessity to treat one's employees with fairness either in the question of salaries or in matters related to the various social benefits they have the right to such as insurance, policies, retirement pensions and the protection from professional accidents.

To sum up, the moral values in use in modern societies necessitate from businessmen and companies alike a strict observance of the different percepts on which the efficiency and the prosperity of the whole community depends. As economy has become a system of interdependent structures forming a unit of a sophisticated nature any mistake or wrongdoing involved in it disturbs its balance and penalizes its functioning. That is why misbehaviours get punished severely.

GOOD LUCK DEAR STUDENTS.

Bribery is the crime of giving or receiving something of value to influence official action. Both the person giving and the person receiving the bribe are guilty of bribery. Bribery is illegal for two reasons: first, it usually involves a public official using his or her office for personal gain; second it can cause officials to make unfair decisions that affect citizens. Bribery is a very old crime. There is evidence of bribery dating back more than 4000 years.

Usually, a person who bribes a public official is paying to get special treatment. This special treatment can come in many forms. For example, a company might bribe an official to win a government contract. Bribing a public official is the most common type of bribery. In the United States, officials convicted of bribery may be fired, removed from office, and sent to prison for up to 20 years. Commercial bribery, the bribery of owners or employees of private companies, is also illegal in many places, but it is less commonly punished.

No one knows how often people commit bribery, but many experts believe that most people who bribe officials are never caught. Bribery is more common in some countries or parts of countries than in others. Many countries have made it illegal to bribe officials from other countries. Bribery and similar illegal transactions in the political sphere alone cost the world an estimated one trillion dollars every year. Less prosperous nations those who export oil and certain other resources have been found to be particularly exposed to bribery and other corrupt activities, though even the wealthiest nations are not safe.

In addition to violating legal and moral codes, bribery poses serious problems for economic development and international trade. The price of bribes must be factored into some international transactions, and corporations often find themselves in the difficult position of having to violate anticorruption laws in their own countries as the price of doing business in other parts of the world.
